HONGKONG, OCTOBER 1st, 1886.

M. JULES FERRAY is at present conducting his election campaign in France. His colonial policy is naturally one of the points on which he offers explanations and justifications, especially with reference to Tonquin. In a recent speech, as summarised by the Paris correspondent of the Times, he said:—

"He imposed on himself as his first rule never to abandon the smallest fragment of the national patrimony. France had great interests in Indo-China, assured rights founded on the treaties of Tonquin. The Cabinet asked the Chamber for the resources necessary to protect them. During the deliberation the death of the heroic Bitterne proved that they had only waited too long.

At that time Parliament was unanimous. Thus arose the Tonquin capitulation, a day of honour, a necessity of patriotism, the most legitimate and most national of all the expeditions. Now the mode in which it had been conducted was criticised.

Errors were discovered in the conduct of that campaign, 3,000 leagues from the mother country, in regions little known, unexplored, which were only discovered as they were conquered. It was impossible to escape errors in such circumstances, but what it was necessary to see and consider were the main lines, the results. The enterprise was at an end, and it had succeeded. They had secured a definitive peace." It is somewhat amusing, after this, to read that the Liberté and several other French journals have lately pronounced in favour of accepting the offer of Liu Jungs-rc, the former Chief of the Black Flags, who has promised to pacify the whole of Tonquin in three months if the French Government will allow him to govern the Northern Provinces as a vassal Prince under the protection of France. It is urged that this solution of the question would spare France great sacrifices of both men and treasure. It is true, as M. Ferray says, that a definitive peace with China has been secured—not on terms which reflect any credit on France, however—but the pacification of Tonquin, and also of Annam, still remains to be accomplished, for which purpose the maintenance of a large army of occupation in the former country will be necessary for a long time to come, while as to Annam, the greatest uncertainty prevails as to the future course of events. One king has been deposed and another set up in his place, the protectorate has been made more stringent, and officers are being sent out from France to reorganise the Annamite army, but whether the measures taken will be sufficient to restore order remains to be seen. At present the country is in a state of complete anarchy; thirty thousand Christians have been massacred within the last two months, and the persecutions still continue. General Du Courre recommended annexation as the only solution of the difficulty, but the Paris Government negatived the proposal, probably because on the one hand they shrank from the responsibility of undertaking the entire government of the country, and on the other out of deference to the feelings of China and the stipulations of the treaty that the dignity of the latter country was not to be prejudiced in the relations of France with Annam. China has not formally renounced her suzerainty over Annam (although she has done so de facto), and annexation might be considered as being to some extent not in accordance with the treaty. At all events, whatever the reason may be, annexation has been vetoed, and it is to be feared that anarchy will continue to prevail for a long time to come.

In Tonquin, beyond the principal military posts of the French, matters are little better than in Annam. From L'Avant du Tonquin we learn that another campaign, described as "the winter campaign of 1885-86," is to be undertaken when the cool weather sets in. This, it is expected, will "effect the pacification of the territory subject to French domination and inflict a terrible if not decisive blow on the bands of brigands now established in the north-west of Tonquin." The work, therefore, is far from complete.

The "bands of brigands" above referred to will no doubt all unite under the redoubtable Liu Jungs-rc to resist the French, and some severe fighting may be expected in the forthcoming campaign.

Liu was ordered by the Chinese Government to retire from Tonquin into Kwangsi, where land was to be assigned for the residence of himself and his followers, but thus far he has not obeyed the order nor does he manifest any intention of so doing. If it be true that he has made overtures to the French, as stated by La Liberté, it would seem that he frustrates Chinese promises, and, if he is to be subject to either France or China, prefers the former. Knowing the devious ways of the Chinese, however, it is impossible to avoid a suspicion that Liu may be acting throughout in pursuance of an understanding, if not with the Chinese Imperial Government, at all events with the southern provincial governments. CHANO CHIN-CHIEN, the Viceroy of the Two Kwangs, is said to have memorialised the Throne, during the truce before the conclusion of peace, for permission to disregard the Imperial orders and act pretty much as Liu is acting now, expressing his willingness to undergo any punishment; it might afterwards be considered necessary to inflict on him therefore. According to the European standard of morality the Viceroy's application was blameworthy in the last degree, but it would not be regarded by the Chinese. It was of course denied by the Throne, but the fact that such a proposal should have been made by one of the foremost men in the Empire is significant, and gives a colour to the supposition that Liu may be acting in accordance with the approval of the Chinese Authorities. If that case, although he cannot be openly assisted by China in the approaching campaign, he will no doubt receive supplies secretly and enjoy sundry advantages that would not be within his reach were China actively unfriendly towards him.

As to the cost of the French operations, M. Ferray said:—"Again it was reported that the expedition to Tonquin had cost France 20,000 men and 500 millions of francs. With regard to expenses, when the war was concluded there was voted 132 millions. Since then, to support the negotiations with China, 200 millions had been voted, but they had not been spent. In fact, it had been established by the Reporter-General of the Budget to the Senate that of this new credit there had only been drawn, on the 1st of August, 24,000,000 for the war on land and 30,000,000 for the navy. One hundred and thirty-two and fifty-four made 166, a sum very far from 500,000,000." The expenditure given by M. Ferray differs materially from previous statements that have been made. The explanation probably lies in the fact that the ex-Minister has omitted some portion of the naval expenditure. In any case the cost has been sufficiently great for any advantage France is likely to reap from her newly acquired territory. The Red River, which was to become such a mighty artery of trade, turns out to be practically useless, and it is a trade of no magnitude to be carried on with Yunnan; a railway will have to be constructed at large cost. The mineral wealth of Tonquin itself is becoming more than ever doubtful, and the climate is simply pestilential. It does not appear from the report in The Times that M. Ferray disputed the statement as to the number of men the expedition had cost. Twenty thousand seems a large figure, and is probably an exaggeration, but there is no doubt that sickness played havoc with the troops, much more so than the bullets of the enemy. On the whole, therefore, the Tonquin expedition does not seem to be a strong card in M. Ferray's hand for election purposes.

The delivery of the French mail was begun at 8 A.M. yesterday morning.

The P. M. steamer City of Peking, with the next American mail, left San Francisco on the 19th ult. for Yokohama and this port.

The Agents (Messrs. Russell & Co.) inform us that the Union Line steamer Kidder, from London, left Singapore for this port on Tuesday, the 29th ult.

By the French mail steamer Oryx there arrived here yesterday M. Krastev, French Consul-General in China, and Mme. Krastev, on their way to Shanghai.

Lient. G. F. Bowen, who has been appointed Aide-de-Camp to his father, His Excellency the Governor, and Miss Agnes Bowen, arrived here yesterday by the Pacific Mail steamer City of New York.

M. Blansabu, the deputy for Cochinchina, arrived at Saigon on the 25th September. He is a candidate for re-election, and is opposed by M. Carabell, a Bonapartist. M. Blansabu's is an Opportunist.

The Daily News says:—"As the steamer Guangzhou, who was preparing to go alongside the Old Ningpo Wharf, Shanghai, on the 25th Sept., set got thwart the tide and collided with the Dehalon, doing some slight damage to herself.

Special attention is directed to the Postal notice on our front page in reference to the practice of forwarding money in unregistered letters. This is a most foolish and reprehensible practice, for it is an encouragement to dishonesty, and will be still more inexcusable now that the registration has been reduced to five cents.

The Amoy Gazette says:—"We have to record the death of the old foreign resident of Amoy, Mr. W. Angier, an English subject, who died on the night of the 22nd September, at the ripe age of 88 years. The deceased has resided here during the occupation of Amoy by the British troops, to whom he acted as a guide for having sailed."

The Amoy Gazette says:—"We have to record the death of the old foreign resident of Amoy, Mr. W. Angier, an English subject, who died on the night of the 22nd September, at the ripe age of 88 years. The deceased has resided here during the occupation of Amoy by the British troops, to whom he acted as a guide for having sailed."

The following additional subscriptions have been received by the Rev. J. B. Ost in response to the further appeal for funds in aid of the Kwangtung Irrigation Relief Fund:

Mr. J. J. des Bemes ... $30
Mr. A. E. Esaberry ... 7
Capt. Bucknall, steamer Nashua ... 1
Mr. J. H. Doolittle, steamer Albion ... 10
Mr. J. J. Francis ... 25
Messrs. Bell & Co. ... 25

Bishop Burdon writes again to The Times mentioning the disastrous floods in Kwangtung. He says:—"By last account, 20,000 persons had perished in the districts of Canton, and 100,000 were left destitute and entirely dependent on charity for the time being. Donations on the spot from Chinese and Europeans, as well as from America and the Straits, had reached to about $100,000 (£20,000). This amount, it was calculated, would probably be sufficient to feed 50,000 persons for six months, but the Chinese Government is assisting to some extent in not in accordance with the treaty. At all events, whatever the reason may be, annexation has been vetoed, and it is to be feared that anarchy will continue to prevail for a long time to come."

An alarm of fire was sounded last night at about half-past nine o'clock indicating a conflagration in the eastern district. It turned out to be a matchless new Reed Corncob which had caught fire. The Government Fire Brigade and the Vol. Fire Brigade were promptly on the spot, but their services were not much needed, as the structure burned itself out in a very short time.

The following short returns are published by the Japanese Official Gazette: Tokyo, Miyakata, 2nd September. Asaka, 15th September. Nagasaki, 2nd September. Sasebo, 17th September. Fukuoka, 24th, bound for Kobe, has been lost at Sasebo, in Karashima. Her crew consisted of thirteen Americans and two Chinese, and eight of the former were drowned.

We regret (says the Japan Mail) to have to report the loss of a vessel on the coast of Japan, the Reed Corncob. The Corncob is an American bark, which left Yokohama on the 24th April, bound for Kobe, has been lost at Sasebo, in Karashima. Her crew consisted of thirteen Americans and two Chinese, and eight of the former were drowned.

We would remind our readers of the opening performance at the Theatre Royal, City Hall to have to report the loss of a vessel on the coast of Japan, the Reed Corncob. The Corncob is an American bark, which left Yokohama on the 24th April, bound for Kobe, has been lost at Sasebo, in Karashima.
